

And While we Breathe, we Hope..

America, Yes, we Can!

Did you see the humans on Tuesday night, November 04th, 2008? They were absolutely shining! They were magnificent! They were so filled with hope, with courage and love and light and feelings elation on a global scale! There were so many tears of joy and relief and recognition of unknown possibilities! Not so different from the success of a tender, green grass shoot, working its way through a brand new crack in a sidewalk on a hot summer's day. Life expressing itself!

A new path, not only for Americans, or democrats or republicans, but the entire world! Something monumental happened on November 04, 2008 election day in America. Everybody was tuned in! I wonder how far it was felt as it rippled across the country and the planet and solar system and Cosmos. I wonder if it is still rippling out among the planets and stars and galaxies and I wonder how fast it moves.

We have seen the world come together in sorrow and in death, i.e., Princess Diana and Mother Theresa, and John Lennon and John Kennedy, and most recently 9/11, but this time we see a spiraling unison of joy and possibility, the likes of which has never graced the face of the planet! So many humans, connected like never before, feeling the powerful elation of hope; of change for the better, of possibilities – less those who would have things the same. And while hope is not part of the tool belt of the intentional reality creator, hope is a huge improvement over fear – because it is open-ended in its possibilities! In opening up the spirit of the humans, they release age-old suppression buried deep in our DNA – because it has been our path, until now.

Fear leads men (male/female, singular/plural) to do unusual and reactionary things. And, while it can lead, it leads to nowhere useful in the 21st century. Hope is far different. Hope is graspable by huge numbers of people, no matter the consciousness level and represents a great start on our possibilities! Something so open-ended that can inspire humans to new levels of accomplishment as a species allows us to soar like never before. Soon, we will be without training wheels and we will become a distant spec of our old selves.

Barack Obama won an election, not by manipulating the levers and greasing the palms of Washington, but by encouraging and identifying for people a structure and mechanism to believe in themselves and then to act. As a community organizer straight out of college, he has run a monumental campaign that has raised untold hundreds of millions of dollars with an average donation of $80! It is my belief that the campaign mechanism he put in place will never end; that what is in place will continue to expand. He will just have a new desk and new digs.

Humanity is in the throws of the discovery of itself. It is rising out of the ashes of its ineptitude and fragility of a new species finding its way. Out of the contrast of greed and avarice, for which humanity has been grossly taken advantage of by the few, humanity is beginning to see the error of its way. Out of the contrast comes clarity on a global level and a whole new world is born. And while we will have the continued refinements of our natures, something startling happened on Tuesday night; a ripple effect that will continue to change the face of the planet forever. I doubt we will forget our lesson soon. We could see it in the faces of individuals shining like never before.

Long live the humans!
